

The History of Tarnagulla Post Office

The current Tarnagulla Post office was built in 1886 on a clear piece of land. It replaced the original Sandy Creek post office that was on the corner of King and Stanley Street.

The building is now used for a shop and a post office and it's made out of brick. It's good if you want a snack or a carton of milk. The post office supplies an important public service.

It's good that the post office is on the main street and this is probably the reason why it took over from the old Sandy Creek Post Office.

The reason why it moved could be because the town found that not many cars were driving past the Old Post Office anymore and the Post Office needed more space. I learnt a lot of new information by walking around and reading plaques and using the website.

I picked this building because I thought it might be interesting. I learnt before it was a post office it was just a nice piece of grass. I think someone can come and visit the post office.
